

Dr. Iuliia Tetteh

Dr. Iuliia Tetteh is an Associate Professor of Agribusiness at Illinois State University, where she teaches and conducts research in agricultural finance, international agribusiness, and human capital development. Originally from Ukraine, she holds a B.S. in International Agribusiness from the National Agricultural University of Kyiv, an MBA from Chadron State College, and a Ph.D. in Agricultural Economics from the University of Nebraska–Lincoln. Since joining Illinois State in 2016, Dr. Tetteh has become known for her engaging teaching, global perspective, and leadership in professional associations such as the Agricultural and Applied Economics Association (AAEA) and the International Food and Agribusiness Management Association (IFAMA). Her research has been published in several peer-reviewed journals, and in 2024 she led Illinois State's IFAMA Global Student Case Competition team to a first-place international finish. Dr. Tetteh lives in Bloomington, Illinois, with her husband, Sam, and their daughter, Vera. She enjoys travel, reading, and exploring farmers' markets.
